DEATH. MYLNE.—On the 31st May, Algernon Guthrie, youngest son of Graham Mylne, Esq., aged 5 months.

Helena Mylne - State Library of Queensland.

Graham Douglas Mylne - State Library of Queensland. Graham D. Mylne (d. 1876) married Helena White (1840–1922) in 1861 and had seven children.

- BYGONE BRISBANE. (1908, January 26). Truth (Brisbane, Qld. : 1900 - 1954), p. 11.

Captain Graham Mylne, M.L.A., and his wife, Helena White, buried a five months old child on May 31, 1868. Mylne in that year was member for the Warrego. The Mackenzie Ministry was in office, and in a precarious position. Not a soul of either the Council or Assembly is alive to-day. South Brisbane was represented by T. B. Stephens, North Brisbane by A. B. Pritchard and Dr. O'Doherty, the Valley by Charles LIlley. The 20 members of the Council, and the 31 of the Assembly are all dead. Mylne spoke on the position of the Ministry, who had been DEFEATED ON THE ADDRESS-IN-REPLY,
by 13 to 11, and the Governor refused to accept their resignation. Mylne's wife, the mother of the child at Paddington, was a Miss White, sister of Albert White, of the Logan River, now of Bluff Downs, west of Townsvllle. Besides his station on the Logan, Albert White held old Coombabah Station which took all the country from the Coomera River to Nerang, including Southport.
In 1870, the Manager of Coombabah was old Sanily Gordon, who kept a whole pack of kangaroo dogs, the leaders of which were usually about a mile ahead of Gordon on the march. Present writer was a youth of 17, when on the first visit to Queensland, in 1870, and we had two days kangarooo hunting with Gordon. Southport was then covered by heavy forest, with rank undergrowth, and long grass, full of wallabies.

Albert White, the present owner of Bluff Downs on the head of the Burdekin, was in Brisbane last week. He is one of the finest specimens of men in Queensland. He was a young man when owner of Nindooimbah and Coombabah. His sister, who is still alive and well, in Sydney, but Mylne died many years ago, at Eatonswell Station, on the Clarence.

  THOMAS.—On the 4th July, at his residence, Captain H. J. Thomas, late of H.M. 87th Fusiliers, in the 54th year of his age.

- TELEGRAPHIC. (1865, July 5). The Brisbane Courier (Qld. : 1864 - 1933), p. 3.

  Yesterday evening, an inquest on the body of Mr. H. J. Thomas, better known as Captain Thomas, was held at Fairfield-house. The deceased died suddenly, from the effects, it is stated, of a dose of arsenic. The evidence adduced showed that the deceased had been for some time past suffering very much from mental anxiety, which lately caused him to take to drink. He went out on Monday night, apparently in his usual health, and returned about 4 a.m. yesterday the worse of liquor, and went to bed. About 8 o'clock he got up, and went out. On his return, Mrs. Thomas tried to induce him to take some breakfast, and after wards made him go again to bed. He then had some conversation with the servant girl, during which he swallowed something which he stated was arsenic. In a short time he became very ill, and Drs. Bell and Lansdown were called in, but, notwithstanding all that medical skill could devise, he died about 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The inquest will be resumed at 2 o'clock this afternoon, it having been adjourned for the purpose of obtaining further medical testimony.

ECHOES OF THE PAST
A NOTABLE PIONEER
(By "Gooragooby," Dalveen.)
Some two years hence—1940—a worthy occasion presents the Darling Downs with an opportunity of attracting all Australia's attention, when the proposed project for commemorating the centenary of the first free land settlement in what is now Queensland, and the foundation of its pastoral industry, may be brought to a complete consummation.
The late Mr. Thos. Hall, in his "Early History of Warwick, etc.," announces that a smart officer named Ernest Elphinstone Dalrymple, on furlough from a Highland regiment stationed in India, paid a visit to his ancestral home in Aberdeen, Scotland, in the late thirties. He had travelled all over India, Ceylon, and North America, and was a brilliant platform speaker, having the happy way of attracting and holding an audience. During his son's visit Sir Robert Horn Elphinstone Dalrymple gave a social to his tenantry so that they could meet the visitor, whom many of them had known in his youthful days. Ernest had now developed into the thoughtful, campaign-scarred man, and as he had always been a keen observer the social was to be made doubly attractive, because he was to make the speech of the evening. After touching in an interesting way about the East, also on the slave conditions of North America, foretelling the Civil War which afterwards convulsed the United States, he alluded to Allan Cunningham's exploration of the Darling Downs. In a fascinating speech he pointed out the many opportunities the people had of improving their prospects in life by going to the new colonies, and much to the surprise of his father and the audience, announced his intention of selling his commission, forming a party of Aberdonians, and making his way to the Darling Downs, in Australia. What tremendous after effects this speech had! … With the public mind interested Ernest Dalrymple had no trouble in quickly forming a party of ten young fellows, in which Dalrymple was placed in charge. Some of the members were Patrick and George Leslie, George and John Gammie, George McAdam, and James Fletcher—early pioneers of the Downs, every one of them."
Ernest Dalrymple was the moving spirit in settlement on the Darling Downs, or to be more precise he was the inspirer of it all. He was second to Pat Leslie in the earliest arrivals, being in charge of Leslie's cattle as well as his own. In July, 1840, he made North Talgai his headquarters, and shortly Goomburra another of the out-stations of the original Canning Downs passed from the Leslies to Dalrymple, after whom the creek on which Allora now stands was named.

Dalrymple sold it to the Aberdeen Company, for whom John Deuchar managed in the early forties. Elphinstone, a rail siding three miles on the Warwick side of Clifton, was named after one of Dalrymple's Christian names. It was to Jubb who, in the forties and fifties, kept a hostelry on the eastern fall of the Main Range, that Dalrymple complained, "that Providence had in his case omitted the one great blessing of all—namely, health."

He was not spared long enough to enjoy the fruits of his labour, passing away at Brisbane on November, 4, 1844, at the age of 24 years. From this it would appear he was only 18 years of age when he prevailed on a number of Aberdonians to throw in their lot with him, and try their fortunes in Australia. The men of his day, so history affirms, maintained that his early death was a tragedy, and a severe blow to the Darling Downs, for he possessed judgment and mental balance far beyond his years.

Of the burials recorded in the Moreton Bay (later Brisbane) Anglican Church's register No. 6 was that of Ernest George Beck Elphinstone Dalrymple. He was buried in the old cemetery at Milton, where his grave was to be seen 50 years later at least. It was in a reserved portion, and for many years was not disturbed by subsequent attention by the sextons. In the memorials of the dead, preserved in the Brisbane Cathedral (St. John the Evangelists' Church), the first in point of time is a black marble tablet with a white border, the work of Patten, a Sydney monumental mason, and bears the following inscription: "Sacred to the memory of Ernest Elphinstone Dalrymple, sixth son of Sir Robert Dalrymple, Horn Elphinstone, Bart, who departed this life November 4, 1844, aged 24 years."

The inquest on the body of George Danby Blanche, who was drowned in the Brisbane River on Friday evening, was held on Saturday. Since publishing the paragraph which appeared in our last issue, we have ascertained that Mr.

Blanche's parents are at present living at Dapto, Illawarra, and not near Melbourne, which they left some time ago; nor was the deceased an only son. The evidence adduced at the inquest differs little from the account we have given, but as the facts are set out at greater length, we subjoin the statements of the witnesses :-Sub-inspector Lloyd deposed that, at about 8 o'clock on Friday evening, he received information that the deceased had been drowned; he went to the locality pointed out to him, and dragged the river ; after an hour's search, he found the body eight or ten yards from the river bank, and opposite an old wharf, in the reach below Kangaroo Point ; the deceased was dressed in his ordinary clothes ; there were no marks of external injury on his body ; found in his coat pocket letters to him from his father and sister, dated from Dapto, Illawarra.—Joseph Fowles, C.E., residing in George-street, said : I have known the deceased for some time ; he was a clerk in the employ of Bright Brothers ; a party of six started in a boat yesterday, at 11 o'clock, from the baths' on an excursion down the river ; the party consisted of Messrs. W. H. Cooper, H. Bohm, J. Wight, T. Lenneberg, the deceased, and myself; the boat was half-decked, and carried a small mainsail and jib ; we went down a little below Doughboy Creek, landed there, and had lunch ; we started at 3 o'clock to return, and called at the Hamilton jetty on the way: we stopped there a considerable time, and played two games of quoits ; we then took in two more passengers—Messrs. Macnish and Elliott—and proceeded on our way up the river ; it was then about half-past 5 o'clock ; we were under sail until we got to Bulimba ferry, where the wind died away ; we then lowered the jib, topped the mainsail on the boom, and commenced to row ; the sun had then set, and the moon was shining ; when we were opposite the old wharf in the reach below Kangaroo Point, the deceased was sitting on a keg on the dock between the mast and stay, and Cooper was a little in front of him ; Macnish and I were rowing ; the deceased jumped up and said " I'm going up the mast," and immediately began to climb up it ; one or two in the boat called out " Don't ;" Macnish said " Come down out of there Blanche," and tried to pull him down ; Macnish was standing on the wash-deck, and the boat leaned over ; the deceased was half way up the mast; as the boat leaned over, Macnish seemed to lose his balance, and caught hold of the stay ; the boat then upset with the mast towards the shore, we were about fifty yards from the land; all of us were thrown into the water ; the boat lay on her side, but did not sink ; her air-tight compartments kept her afloat; I swam towards the bank a little way, and then returned to the boat ; Wight was holding on to the boat, and also Lenneberg, who had made for the shore in the first instance, but afterwards came back saying, he could not see the land ; the other five swam towards the shore, and as I found the boat would not float with the weight of three holding on to it, I followed them; about twenty yards from the shore I saw the deceased ; he was six yards to the left of me ; his head and shoulders were out of the water, and his hat was on his head ; I did not see his arms moving, but he did not seem distressed, and did not call out for assistance ; Elliott was two yards in front of me ; the deceased was not making much way, and appeared to be drifting ; as soon as Elliott touched shore he said, " Poor Blanche is gone ;" when I got out I looked round, and could see nothing of the deceased ; we ran along the bank to see whether we could find him, and hailed some boats to come and help us ; we got into a boat and looked about, but saw nothing of the deceased ; we found the deceased's hat about a hundred and fifty yards from where he upset ; I never saw the deceased again; the ketch Violet brought us up to town ; Lenneberg and Wight were picked up by a passing boat, and they reported the matter to the police first ; we went back to the place in another boat, and when we got there the deceased's body had been found. By a juror:—Ten minutes, or a quarter-of-an-hour elapsed from the time the boat upset until I last saw the deceased. The Coroner (Mr. Massey) briefly addressed the jury, who returned a verdict of " Accidentally drowned." The funeral of Mr. Blanche took place on Saturday afternoon, and was attended by a large number of his friends.

- WEEKLY EPITOME. (1866, January 13). The Brisbane Courier (Qld. : 1864 - 1933), p. 5.

Two cases of suicide have occurred-one on Friday, the 5th instant, and the other on the following day. The first was that of Julius Kopp, a young German, well known in Brisbane as a teacher of music and leader of the orchestra at the Victoria Theatre ; …

Mr. Kopp is supposed to have shot himself on the brink of a waterhole, at the bottom of which his body was discovered.

- INQUEST. (1866, January 9). The Brisbane Courier (Qld. : 1864 - 1933), p. 2.

INQUEST.

AN enquiry into the cause of the death of Julius Kopp, whose body was found near Hill-side, Kedron Brook, on Saturday last, was held at the United Kingdom Hotel, yesterday morning, before the coroner and a jury of seven. The first witness called was Henry Teichman, whose evidence was unimportant. The next witness was John Teichman, who deposed that he lives at Hill-side, near Kedron Brook ; on Saturday last, about 12 o'olock, his son came to him, and told him that he had found a hat, coat, and walking-stick on a log in a water-hole in Mr. Blundell's paddock ; he went to the water-hole with a man, named Schwank, stirred up the water with a stick, and the body of the deceased came to the surface ; they went away, and about a quarter of an hour after they returned to the water-hole with Mr. Sutherland ; the body had then disappeared from the surface, and they poked about with a stick, but it did not come up ; witness then went home.

James Sutherland deposed that the water-hole in which deceased was found is about half-a-mile from his residence ; on Saturday last his gardener (Schwank) told him that he and the previous witness had found a dead body in the hole ; he went there, and after some trouble, succeeded in bringing the body of the deceased to the surface ; he searched the pockets of the clothes of the deceased, and found fifteen £1 notes, a programme, and a medical prescription with the name of Julius Kopp upon it ; he then went to Brisbane and gave information to the police, one of whom returned with him to the hole ; the body was then upon the bank.

Detective Craven deposed that he received information that a body had been found in a water-hole in Mr. Blundell's paddock, on Saturday last, about 3 o'clock p.m. ; he took Mr. Faulkner with him, and proceeded to the spot ; on arriving at the waterhole, found the body of the deceased upon the bank ; he was lying upon his back, with his knees slightly bent, and his right hand raised towards his head ; the face was all blown away, as if by a discharge from fire-arms, and there was a small hole in the back of the head ; the body had not the appearance of having been long in the water, and was not much decomposed ; Mr. Faulkner identified the body as that of Julius Kopp, and searched the pockets of the deceased, and found in the waistcoat and trousers a gold watch and chain and various other articles ; he then searched the coat pockets, and found six leaden balls, a quantity of swan shot, a flask of gunpowder, a box of caps, and a pocket-handkerchief marked F ; shortly afterwards, he had the body removed to the morgue ; had searched for the pistol, but could not find it ; the watch on the deceased had stopped at a quarter to 5 o'clock.

Charles Faulkner deposed that he knew the deceased, who had for some time been a lodger in his house; deceased had been poorly for the last few months, and his spirits had been very depressed ; he had known the deceased to have delirium through the pain he had suffered ; he saw him for the last time on Friday morning, when he looked very wild about the eyes ; he went out of the house about 9 o'clock on Friday morning, saying that he was going to see a doctor ; that was the last time witness saw him alive ; during that day several came to the house to enquire for Kopp ; when he had not come back at the close of the day, witness told the police that he was missing ; he went to the water-hole on Saturday with detective Craven, and identified the body lying there as that of Julius Kopp ; witness had never seen the deceased with firearms in his possession of any description ; did not think that deceased had any firearms so long as he (witness) had known him.

Dr. Smith deposed that he had attended on the deceased for the last six weeks. The malady with which he had been afflicted was nervous debility, which was caused partly by mental excitement connected with his business, and partly by physical weakness ; witness saw the deceased on Friday morning, when he looked very wild, and in his conversation mixed up two subjects together ; witness gave him a prescription, and advised him to take a car and go to Breakfast Creek and back for exercise ; on deceased leaving witness' house, he took him by both hands, and shook them, saying " God bless you, doctor !"

Dr. Lansdown was also examined as to the nature of the injuries ; he stated that they were such as to cause death.

After some consultation, the jury returned a verdict that the deceased committed suicide whilst laboring under a fit of temporary insanity.
